Presentation from CRISE- Cities for Responsible Investment and Strategic Enforcement

This is a grant program funded by the NY Attorney General providing municipalities with technical and management support to improve their code enforcement practices 10 New York cities were chosen to participate and Buffalo was one.

Report from Chief Menza:

The party problem has been much improved. The police have written 50 tickets for $1,500 for nuisance parties and all tickets have been paid. This seems to be effective in curtailing disruptive parties. Chief Menza also believes that the sale of properties to more responsible landlords has helped, and since the disruptive parties have been almost always fraternity or sorority parties, landlords are trying to avoid leasing to individuals associated with those groups.

Aggressive panhandling on Main Street has also been better, please report incidents that occur.

There have been reports of homeless individuals sleeping along the bike path and in linear park. The police send an officer through there at least once each shift.

Burglaries tend to focus on student houses with electronics being the targets. Many have been during the day when students are away, but some non student houses have been hit. Menza says cameras have been very helpful in identifying the intruders. He recommends cameras, LOCK ALL BACK WINDOWS!!

Drive by shooting on Flower- The incident was gang related, they had come into the neighborhood and set up a safe house. The landlord said he had hired a company to screen tenants and they clearly didn't. The people involved have moved out.
